Bolton Camp, Learn to Fish with "Girls Can Too" Students

The very popular Learn to Fish program traveled to Bolton Camp to conduct a seminar for the "Girls Can Too" Program.

The group were taught rules and regulations related to fishing, received hands-on teaching of knot tying and how to safely cast a fishing rod. TRCA staff presented important information new anglers need to know in order to fish legally, successfully, safely and sustainably.

Following the training, the participants were given ample time along the shoreline of the Humber River to enjoy fishing and practicing casting techniques.

The Girls Can Too program provides young women with hands-on learning experiences in various careers including trades and environmental sciences. The program is spearheaded and delivered by three female university students and includes mentorship and training opportunities with females from a variety of professions.
